4	Residential Property. A residential property is one in which sleeping accommodations are provided for normal living purposes, and includes all buildings designed to provide sleeping accommodations except those classified under Health Care or Detention and Correctional Property (major division 3). Subdivisions of residential property used in this section are separated according to potential life hazard. Popular names and legal definitions may be different from those given here. The categories here, however, are significant from a fire and life protection standpoint. The property should be classified by its actual use according to the standard definitions given here, not by what the property owner cares to call his building. Thus, a residential property called a “hotel” on the sign over the door may not be a hotel by these definitions. From a fire standpoint it may be an apartment (division 42) or a rooming house (division 43), depending upon its use. Many times it is useful to know how many living units are in the building, as it provides a measure of the potential human exposure, whether they are all involved in a fire or not. It is recommended that the number of living units be reported separately.
41	One- and Two-Family Dwelling. One- and two-family dwellings typically have separate living units and a kitchen in each unit. Included are private dwellings and duplexes each occupied by members of a single family group, with rooms rented to no more than three outsiders per unit. If a separate business or other occupancy is contained in the building, the residential unit(s) is classified in division 42. Row houses, town houses, garden apartments, and other similar units, regardless of local terminology, are classified here when one or two units are separated from the adjoining units by fire division assemblies, and the one or two units are under their own roof. A manufactured home and a mobile home not in transit should be classified in this division. A travel trailer not in transit and used as a dwelling should be classified here, and also should be classified as a travel trailer (subdivision 15) in 6.7.4.2. A manufactured home, a mobile home, or a travel trailer in transit should be classified using the appropriate classification in major division 9, and its type should be classified in 6.7.4.2. Fires in these should be classified as vehicle fires when they are in transit. Attached parking garages are included here unless separated from the dwelling by a fire division assembly. Detached parking garages are classified in subdivision 881.

42	Multifamily Dwelling. Multifamily dwellings include apartment buildings, condominium apartments, town houses, row houses, tenements, or flats when three or more units are located within common fire division walls, and the units are under a common roof or have a common basement. Multifamily dwellings typically provide for families to live independently of each other, with kitchen facilities in each unit. An apartment in a building with a separate store, office, or other business is identified in this division and also as a residential property with business use (48) in General Property Use (see 6.5.2).
429	Multifamily dwellings.

Rooming, boarding, or lodging houses include facilities with living quarters in which separate sleeping rooms are rented, with sleeping accommodations for a total of not more than 16 persons, on either a transient or permanent basis, with or without meals, but without separate cooking facilities for individual occupants. Halfway houses or group care homes can be classified here if all persons are certified by mental or health authorities as capable of self-help under emergency conditions. Where rooms are rented for one to three persons, they should be classified in division 41. Where rooms are rented for more than 16 persons, they should be classified in division 44 or division 46.

Excluded are facilities for 16 or fewer persons (division 43).
